Session Description

Debriefing is one of the most important elements to support student learning when using clinical simulations, and it is required by ASHA if students are to count simulation time toward the allowable 75 total simulation hours. Yet, debriefing best practices are still largely undefined in speech-language pathology. It behooves us to explore how to best support student learning, especially since clinical simulations show promise in the literature and are being widely adopted across CSD programs. This session will review debriefing requirements for clinical simulations and describe debriefing best practices from speech-language pathology, nursing, and medicine. Participants will leave this session better equipped to prepare for and facilitate meaningful debriefing to optimize student learning.

Speaker Bio: Dr. Kenyan Martin is Assistant Professor and Clinic Director at CSU, Chico. She is passionate about clinical education and supervision and applied research. Her current research interests are in clinical simulation and debriefing. Clinically, Kenyan enjoys serving patients with aphasia and traumatic brain injury, as well as users of AAC. Patricia Reyes is a speech-language pathologist with three years of experience. During her three years of experience, she has worked in acute care, inpatient rehabilitation and skilled nursing settings.
